Abstract

Companies, especially those in Banjarmasin, are always looking for new ventures, and the Pop-up Coffee Shop business is one such opportunity. Recently, Pop-up Coffee Shops, which are temporary cafes, have been popping up in Banjarmasin. Currently, there are approximately 10 Pop-up Coffee Shop brands in Banjarmasin. The increasing number of Pop-up Coffee Shop brands has led to competition among similar businesses to win market share. The purpose of this study is to identify the strengths, weaknesses, opportunities, and challenges, as well as the strategies employed by these businesses. This study uses a qualitative descriptive research method in a field setting. The subject of this study is pop-up coffee shops in Banjarmasin. The object of this study is to analyze the competitiveness of pop-up coffee shops in Banjarmasin. Data was collected through interviews, observations, and documentation, which were then processed and analyzed using qualitative descriptive methods to determine the strengths and weaknesses of competitiveness as well as the opportunities and challenges of pop-up coffee shops in Banjarmasin. The results of the study show that the SWOT analysis of pop-up coffee shops in Banjarmasin has internal strengths (quality human resources, strategic location, superior products) and external opportunities (large market, technology). They have weaknesses (lack of facilities, management) and threats (stiff competition, changing consumer tastes). To grow, they need to expand their business, innovate, utilize social media effectively, and maintain high-quality standards. Although some strategies have been implemented, they still need to be more proactive in collaborating, standardizing products, and supporting facilities to foster sustainable growth and market relations.

INTRODUCTION

Life in urban areas today is characterized by rapid shifts in consumer preferences and the emergence of trend-driven lifestyles, which significantly influence the development of small and medium enterprises. These changing consumption patterns encourage the growth of various new business models, including food and beverage ventures that rely heavily on innovation and brand differentiation (Iman et al., 2022). In Banjarmasin, this phenomenon is reflected in the increasing number of pop-up coffee shops that compete within a dynamic and highly competitive market environment. The rise of these temporary or mobile coffee businesses highlights the need to understand their competitive strategies, market positioning, and the economic factors that shape their sustainability. Therefore, a focused examination of the competitiveness challenges faced by pop-up coffee shops becomes essential for understanding their ability to survive and thrive in Banjarmasin's urban economy.

Several companies that have emerged today are the result of innovative ideas that have developed into creating their own markets, or imaginative business concepts motivated by perceptions of others' behavior. This is evident in the numerous coffee shops in the city of Banjarmasin. The involvement of coffee shops in the town of Banjarmasin presents a promising business opportunity for entrepreneurs. Additionally, supporting facilities for visitors, such as Wi-Fi, live music, and exceptional designs, attract various segments of society in the city of Banjarmasin (Anjarsari et al., 2021).

Every coffee shop hopes that the market will accept its products. One sign that a product is acceptable is the number of consumers who purchase it. One way to achieve this is by understanding the desires and needs of the market, which can then serve as a guide for developing strategies and encouraging informed customer decision-making processes (Fauzi et al., 2022). As for a cup of coffee priced at Rp 20,000 to Rp 25,000, this price is twice that of a cup of coffee sold on the street. However, the price charged has become the market price for every coffee shop. In the city of Banjarmasin, numerous coffee shops offer diverse concepts, aiming to satisfy customers and gain market share to drive business profits. Coffee shops are experiencing increased growth, leading to increasingly fierce competition. Coffee consumers have diverse tastes and preferences that satisfy their desires, so it is not surprising that many coffee shops in the city of Banjarmasin experience fluctuations in sales, and some even go out of business because they cannot withstand the competition (Wowor et al., 2020).

Nowadays, many creative innovations are emerging in line with the times, one of which is the pop-up coffee shop. Pop-up coffee shops are temporary cafes, many of which are located on the outskirts of Banjarmasin. Some use carts, motorcycles, or even cars as a means of selling and marketing their products. They are called temporary because they set up and take down their stalls, and they typically borrow space from others to sell their goods. This differs from permanent coffee shops, which are intended to be long-term businesses (Armenski & Gomezelj, 2011).

The term pop-up retail began in the late 1990s after the Ritual Expo event organized by Patrick Courrielche, which introduced a temporary retail concept combining music, food, and fashion into a unique purchasing experience (Keiser & Tortora, 2022). In the context of Banjarmasin, the rise of Pop-up Coffee Shops reflects a growing market trend in which businesses experiment with flexible, low-cost retail formats to capture shifting consumer preferences. Currently, approximately ten Pop-up Coffee Shop brands are operating in the city, creating an increasingly competitive environment. To understand this competition, established economic theories such as Porter's Five Forces and the concept of competitive advantage provide a useful analytical lens. These frameworks highlight how firms must respond to competitive pressures, including rivalry among existing sellers, the threat of new entrants, product differentiation, and consumer bargaining power. Therefore, Pop-up Coffee Shop entrepreneurs must strategically innovate product offerings, enhance customer experience, and strengthen market positioning to sustain competitiveness in a dynamic urban coffee market.

Not all competitive strategies can be applied by a manager or owner due to limitations driven by external factors (opportunities and threats) and internal factors (strengths and weaknesses) that managers or owners face in dealing with competition (Sari & Halim, 2022). In line with this, it is essential to establish a comprehensive system through three stages of decision-making: the input stage, the coordination stage, and the selection stage. The input stage is crucial for identifying potential sources and assessing the company's position, enabling it to determine the right strategy for achieving its long-term goals. Based on the explanation above, the author will conduct research on the competitive analysis of Pop-up Coffee Shops in the city of Banjarmasin.

RESEARCH METHODS

This research employs a qualitative descriptive approach supported by field research methods. The qualitative approach was selected because it allows researchers to explore the real conditions, competitive dynamics, and strategic behaviors of pop-up coffee shops in Banjarmasin in depth. Qualitative methods are particularly appropriate for understanding the subjective perspectives of business owners, their decision-making processes, and the contextual challenges faced by temporary or mobile businesses—phenomena that cannot be fully captured through numerical data alone. According to Sugiyono (2019), descriptive qualitative research is designed not only to collect and compile data, but also to interpret and provide meaning to the findings in order to understand complex social and economic conditions.

The research was conducted in Banjarmasin, specifically focusing on pop-up coffee shops that represent the emerging trend of temporary cafés in the city. The subjects in this study are pop-up coffee shop owners and sellers who have operated for at least one year, ensuring that respondents possess adequate business experience to describe competitiveness-related challenges. The object of the research is the competitiveness of pop-up coffee shops in Banjarmasin, including internal and external factors that influence their market position.

Data collected in this research consist of information related to the strengths, weaknesses, opportunities, and challenges faced by pop-up coffee shops, as well as the competitive strategies they employ. Data were obtained using interview techniques involving direct interaction with owners and sellers of pop-up coffee shops in Banjarmasin. Qualitative interviews are used to gain a deep understanding of participants' perspectives, motivation, and evaluation of their business strategies (Ardiansyah et al., 2023). Interviews may be structured, semi-structured, or unstructured depending on the predetermined analytical framework (Ardiansyah et al., 2023). Only branches or business units that granted permission to participate were included.

Although the main approach of this study is qualitative, the researcher also recognizes the potential contribution of quantitative indicators—such as market share, pricing strategies, sales trends, or elasticity of demand—as complementary measures. These indicators are not used as primary data but serve as contextual support for interpreting competitiveness more comprehensively. The choice of a qualitative-dominant design is therefore justified by the exploratory nature of the study, the limited availability of standardized quantitative data for temporary pop-up businesses, and the need to understand competitive strategies as experienced directly by business actors in Banjarmasin.

DISCUSSION

A. Analysis of Strengths, Weaknesses, Opportunities, and Challenges of the Competitiveness of Pop-Up Coffee Shops in Banjarmasin

1. Strengths

Pop-up coffee shops in Banjarmasin possess strong internal advantages that significantly influence their economic performance. High-quality human resources (HR)—particularly in skills and hospitality—directly enhance customer experience, which increases customer retention rates and extends customer lifetime value. Strategic locations, which attract high foot traffic, contribute to higher daily sales volume and faster turnover. Attractive stall designs and visually appealing concepts support brand differentiation, reducing price elasticity and allowing businesses to maintain competitive yet profitable pricing.

Superior product quality, including standardized flavor profiles and the use of premium raw materials, creates perceived value that supports higher margin products such as signature beverages. Additional offerings—such as free espresso shots, discounts, and branch expansion—function as competitive levers that widen market reach and increase transactional frequency. Economically, these strengths translate into increased revenue stability, enhanced brand positioning, and improved capacity to secure and grow market share in Banjarmasin's increasingly saturated coffee segment.

2. Weaknesses

The SWOT analysis identifies several internal constraints that carry notable economic consequences. Inadequate facilities reduce seating comfort, lowering average transaction duration and limiting potential upselling. HR-related issues—such as inconsistent behavior, age restrictions, and salary dissatisfaction—lead to higher turnover rates, increasing training and replacement costs. Slow espresso preparation and dependence on single suppliers disrupt service efficiency and cost structures, potentially reducing daily sales capacity.

Marketing weaknesses, particularly reliance on word-of-mouth and outdated displays, restrict brand visibility and limit customer acquisition, resulting in lower market penetration. An inability to maintain quality consistency also diminishes customer trust, directly impacting repeat purchases. Economically, these weaknesses create operational inefficiencies, escalate costs, and suppress revenue growth hindering competitiveness in a market with low switching costs.

3. Opportunities

Significant opportunities exist due to Banjarmasin's expanding coffee consumer base across various age groups. The high demand for coffee products, combined with evolving consumer preferences, allows pop-up shops to broaden product lines, increase average purchase value, and tap into niche markets such as specialty brews or seasonal menus.

Digital platforms offer low-cost promotional channels that can dramatically reduce customer acquisition costs while expanding visibility beyond physical locations. By leveraging technology, pop-up coffee shops can adopt pre-order systems, online delivery partnerships, or digital loyalty programs, all of which stabilize sales flow and increase market share. Economically, such innovations support revenue diversification and strengthen long-term business sustainability.

4. Threats

The most significant threat is intense competition from both established brands and new market entrants. This increases the risk of market share dilution, especially for businesses without strong differentiation. Weather challenges reduce operational hours, particularly for outdoor pop-up models, directly influencing daily income and profit margins.

The shift in consumer priorities toward aesthetic appeal over product taste forces businesses to invest more in visual branding, increasing operational costs if not managed strategically. Additionally, rapid technological change can widen the gap between digitally adaptive and non-adaptive businesses. Economically, these threats can lower profitability, increase risk of customer loss, and affect long-term sustainability unless effectively mitigated through innovation and quality consistency.

B. Analysis of the Competitive Strategy of Pop-Up Coffee Shops in Banjarmasin

1. SO Strategy

a. Business Expansion and Flavor Innovation

Utilizing strong human resources and product quality to introduce new menu variants and expand business branches in high-traffic areas.

b. Promoting Unique Coffee Flavor

Highlighting distinctive taste profiles as a competitive advantage to capture wider market segments and strengthen brand positioning.

c. Strategic Collaborations and Partnerships

Cooperating with local businesses, event organizers, or community groups to increase market exposure and customer engagement.

d. Optimizing Social Media Marketing

Using social media platforms to boost brand visibility, educate consumers about product quality, and cultivate customer loyalty.

2. WO Strategy

a. Collaboration with Government or Local Agencies

Partnering for training, licensing support, and promotional events that strengthen business legitimacy and operational capacity.

b. Implementing Digital Systems

Introducing POS systems, digital payment tools, and online ordering platforms to improve efficiency and address operational gaps.

c. Menu Research and Product Development

Conducting R&D to meet shifting consumer preferences, especially among younger demographics seeking unique coffee experiences.

d. Influencer Collaboration and Aesthetic Improvement

e. Engaging social media influencers and enhancing shop aesthetics to strengthen branding and increase customer attraction.

3. ST Strategy

a. Product Standardization

Maintaining consistent quality across outlets to compete with larger, more established coffee brands.

b. Optimizing Human Resource Capabilities

Strengthening barista skills and customer service performance to differentiate from competitors.

c. Maintaining and Enhancing Product Quality

Ensuring taste consistency and using premium ingredients to maintain customer loyalty amid intense competition.

4. WT Strategy

a. Routine Maintenance and Facility Improvements

Addressing physical limitations to improve customer comfort and operational flow.

b. Establishing Standard Operating Procedures (SOPs)

Implementing clear operational guidelines to reduce variability in service quality and product preparation.

c. Using Alternative Suppliers

Diversifying supply chains to reduce dependency and mitigate risks of supply disruption.

d. Conducting Regular Market Research

Monitoring industry trends, consumer behavior shifts, and competitor strategies to remain adaptive and competitive.

CONCLUSION

Pop-up coffee shops in Banjarmasin demonstrate a combination of strengths—high-quality HR, strategic locations, appealing stall designs, and distinctive products—that contribute to significant economic advantages, including increased customer retention, stable sales volume, and stronger market positioning. However, weaknesses such as inadequate facilities, HR issues, and inconsistent marketing efforts pose economic risks that may limit profitability and efficiency.

Opportunities related to product innovation, digital outreach, and a growing coffee consumer base offer pathways for revenue expansion and future market share growth. Conversely, threats from intense competition, weather constraints, and shifting consumer preferences may reduce competitiveness unless businesses adapt with stronger digital integration and quality-focused strategies.

The SWOT-based strategies formulated (SO, WO, ST, WT) indicate that long-term sustainability depends on maintaining product quality, improving digital capabilities, and enhancing operational efficiency. From an economic perspective, these strategies aim to optimize profitability, strengthen competitive advantage, and ensure stable growth in Banjarmasin's dynamic coffee market.

A key limitation of this study is the reliance on qualitative findings, which may benefit from complementary quantitative measures such as market share estimation, pricing patterns, or customer satisfaction scores. Future research should incorporate mixed methods to assess the economic impact of competitive strategies more precisely, ensuring stronger empirical validity.
